Reactivation of the periodontium has been studied extensively in the context of promoting periodontal regeneration. Periodontal ligament cells (PDL) have been shown to be capable of differentiating into myofibroblasts, although the ability to convert back to a PDL phenotype is limited. As transforming growth factor-beta1 (TGF-beta1) has been implicated in the differentiation of many cell types, this study sought to determine whether this cytokine could affect the conversion of PDL cells to myofibroblasts. TGF-beta1 significantly up-regulated the expression of alpha-smooth muscle actin and type I collagen in PDL cells after 2 weeks. PDL cells incubated in the presence of TGF-beta1 also acquired a spindle shaped fibroblast-like morphology, with enhanced actin stress fibres. This conversion was inhibited by the TGF-beta1 type I receptor inhibitor SB431542. When quiescent PDL cells were precultured in serum-free medium containing TGF-beta1, the cells were found to be highly responsive, acquiring myofibroblast characteristics after 24 h. Conditioned medium from TGF-beta1-treated PDL cells induced fibroblast-like morphological changes in primary PDL cells. The ability of TGF-beta1 to promote the conversion of PDL cells into myofibroblasts may be of potential therapeutic benefit in the treatment of periodontal diseases.Q: Android HttpURLConnection using http vs https I have noticed that when I am using HttpURLConnection I get a difference in output when sending the request to https vs http. https url: String url = ""; try {
